But if you run away from your own problem, it will follow you around and eat you alive like a bunch of mean little kids. Your New Year's resolution can look something like this: "I will be more upbeat about the culture and politics surrounding me. I will focus on becoming a better leader and a more committed consumer. I will evolve and become more evolved in my thinking. I will be more positive. I will be a better citizen." How many times have you told yourself you'd be better if only you could... The elusive search for the perfect career that will make you happy. The perfect man who will put a smile on my face. The perfect financial situation. What if you could stop living for these things? What if you could stop chasing the next fix, and just live? I know it's a brave thing to do and many of you probably have good reasons for keeping yourself on a tight leash. But sometimes I think people are afraid to live because they don't want to live with their mistakes. Like a person might be afraid to walk in front of a train, so instead of walking he just runs. The reality is that we all make mistakes. We all get in over our heads. We screw up. We get carried away. We overthink things. We crave the next fix. We flounder. We don't learn. We do stupid things. We do things we regret. Can you imagine what it would be like if we were honest and admitted we make mistakes? Can you imagine what it would be like if we opened ourselves up, stopped hiding our messes and just lived? I could be that person. I could be that honest person. I could be the one who looks you in the eye, says "Here's a mistake I made. Here's what I did wrong." And I can tell you that's what it would be like. It would make life so much easier. And we all could live. If you're that kind of person and you want to be that kind of person, your resolution should be something like this: "I will f678ea9f9e
